

I hate to do this to y'all, but access to this file has been chewing up an amazing amount of my site's bandwidth and CPU, and on the basis of that I started looking around for the source of the Hazard Fraught Tool Catalog that used to exist at this URL.

Turns out the source for this brilliant piece of writing likely ran in MAD Magazine #515 (June 2012), and was apparently written and produced by Scott Maiko and Scott Bricher.

Learning this, and seeing the impact on my little web site, I've decided to take it down. If the owners of this content host it online and would like me to redirect to their bit of awesome, I am so there.

Apologies to the rest of y'all, but I really should have researched ownership before I put it up on my site, and your favorite search engine can find numerous other sources for the Hazard Fraught Tool Catalog.

Dan Lyke
dantlyke@flutterby.com